'Get to Know You' Survey

Getting started with the survey

Heading back to school, Panorama is excited to offer a new survey tool to help teachers build positive relationships with their students from the very start of the year. Research shows that healthy teacher-student relationships are critically important for students' classroom engagement and sense of belonging at school. That's why Panorama is excited to offer a 'Get to Know You' survey to all teachers entirely for free, as well as our other surveys.

Panorama's 'Get to Know You' survey asks students to answer questions about their interests and hobbies outside of school, as well as questions about their values and learning styles.

Panorama's online survey lets teachers complete the survey before their students take the survey in class. In doing so, students will instantly see what they have in common (up to 5 shared items) with their teacher upon finishing the survey.

Once students have completed the survey, teachers can sign in to their Panorama account to view what they have in common with their students and be prompted to reflect on these similarities. It's our goal to support teachers in developing strong relationships with their students from the very start of the school year.

Read about the research

Panorama's online 'Get to Know You' survey tool is developed based on research conducted by Dr. Hunter Gehlbach and his colleagues at the Harvard Graduate School of Education. Their study, "Changes in Teacher-Student Relationships," was published in the British Journal of Educational Psychology and describes how important these relationships are and how they can change over time—all the more reason to get your teacher-student relationships off to a great start by getting to know your students this school year.

How to use the survey in your classroom or school:
